Programs / schemes / options for financing film for kids and youth audience

DANISH FILM INSTITUTE (DFI)

Danish film policy consistently aims to develop a film culture for children. Since 1982, the Danish Film Act has dedicated at least 25% of all government film subsidies to films for children and youth (around 25 million DKR pr year? (3,3 mio euro). This has had an enormous impact – on output, consistency and quality. Storytelling from a child’s perspective, solid production values and original stories are key.

The Film Workshop

The Film Workshop is a unit under The Danish Film Institute. The unit is primarily targeted to young people who show the potential and ability to establish themselves professionally in the film sector. The unit has a large network and can lend inspiration and give guidance, which in turn can assist the filmmaker in further education or work within the film sector. Support is granted in the form of access to professional equipment for production, contribution to the basic costs of production and guidance from a consultant. Secondary to this, and to encourage talent, the unit organizes seminars and workshops and is available for consulting.
