Ginger and her friend Rosa was born on the same day at the same hospital and here lies the reason for their friendship which they cherish throughout their childhood. Politically, The Cold War is high on the agenda and Ginger and Rosa are deeply worried about the atomic bomb and the end of the world and begins to flirt with young radicals on the political left. Rosa is more concerned with her Christian faith, and the two friends discuss both political and religious values. Ginger is in a demonstration that has a confrontation with the police and she is arrested. After a trip to jail, she is released again.
